RESIDENTS OBJECT TO JOINING FLOOD INSURANCE PROGRAM

By Rex Rhein

Two town residents objected at the Sept. 11 Town Council meeting to the town's previous decision to enter the federal flood insurance program. The town as a whole is not in a flood plain, but a tiny part at the foot of Oberlin Ave. is.

Phyllis Fordham said she had not heard about the town's intention to enter the program until she read about it in Sept. issue of The Echo. (The Echo reported that in August the council unanimously voted to approve a "Resolution of Intent to Enter the National Flood Insurance Program".)

Clerk-Treasurer Cathie Polak noted that the town had only been given until Sept. 29 to join the program.

Ms. Fordham said residents who might have opposed the council's resolution, if they had known about the issue in advance, were denied a timely opportunity to argue their case. She also objected that the agenda for the Sept. 11 meeting had not been distributed to residents until that same day. Ms. Fordham said she opposed joining the program because it might affect the cost or availability of mortgages for residential property, particularly for those who decline to purchase the insurance. Her position was partly supported by resident Betsy Carpenter, who said she had talked to insurance agents, real estate agents, and her own mortgage lender in an attempt to weigh the costs and benefits of the program for herself.

Ms. Carpenter said the only benefit she found was

NEW CONGREGATION TO WORSHIP IN GLEN ECHO

By Rex Rhein

The 63-person congregation of the First Agape A.M.E. Zion Church on Seven Locks Road will be worshipping at the Baptist Church annex on Harvard and University Aves. for the next year or so.

Tom Meeks, one of the deacons at Glen Echo Baptist Church, informed the Glen Echo Town Hall at its Sept. 11 meeting that the church wanted to allow the members of the 107-year-old A.M.E. church to be able to use its annex because the old church had burned down in 2004. It previously has been using a synagogue for its services. He said the intention was to make the building available for as long as it takes "to get their church back."

Also at the meeting were the A.M.E. church's pastor, Reverend Edgar Bankhead, a retired Navy chaplain, and his wife, Rev. Judy Bankhead. The pastor said fewer than 20 cars would be involved at its events, and that the Glen Echo Baptist Church -- which has an even smaller congregation than the A.M.E. church -- would allow them to use its parking lot.

Mr Meeks said that another group -- an Hispanic congregation -- wished to rent the larger church building on Vassar Circle "perhaps in the afternoons." He was enthusiastic about the A.M.E. congregation but expressed some reservations about the impact that the other group might have on the town.

cheaper rates for those who wanted flood insurance. If the town declined to join the program, the annual cost for flood insurance for its residents would be approximately $2,000, but it would be cheaper if the town joined.

The downside to joining the program was also dealt with at the August council meeting by resident (and Realtor) Eleanor Balaban. She had questioned whether the town's participation in the federal program would make it more difficult for residents to secure mortgages. Mayor Beers had said then that it was not likely because not a single house in Glen Echo lies on the flood plain. At the September meeting, Ms. Balaban supported the Council's decision to join the federal program.

Ms. Carpenter said she was not reassured that the council's investigation had been thorough. She questioned Councilman Dan Macy's statements that it was possible to purchase flood insurance without the town's participation in the federal program. Mr. Macy told her he had gotten his information from his own insurance carrier, Fireman's Fund. But some other insurance companies do offer the policies, at the higher price, Ms. Carpenter insisted.

A heated argument arose between Ms. Carpenter and Mr. Macy about whether residents of non-participating towns really can buy flood insurance, and whether mortgages would be more expensive to obtain for property owners who decline to buy the insurance when the town has participated in the federal program. Councilman Macy said that virtually all other towns in Montgomery County participate in the program, along with Montgomery County itself (for unincorporated communities).

He said mortgage lenders looked at whether the specific property itself was in a flood plain, not whether the property was in a town participating in the federal program. "It's down to the property level, it's not based on ZIPs," he said. But Ms. Carpenter said that some lenders "don't do it fine-grained," that "joining the program might raise residents' exposure, which could affect town property values."

Ms Fordham agreed. Being in a town listed as in a flood plain "could affect lending underwriting", she said. "It could affect the amount of your mortgage interest." But Mr. Macy, who said he has worked for a mortgage lender, interjected several times that "that's absolutely false!" Ms. Fordham continued that interest rates "can be affected by so many things, including property title." In commercial real estate, she said, if there is "any hint that there could be some problem with the land underneath the property, property values would definitely be less." She said she feared that people looking into buying Glen Echo property might assume that the entire town was in a flood plain, although only a very small part is.

No change in the August resolution on joining the federal flood program was adopted at the September meeting. However, Councilman Macy said the Council should address the issue of notifying and providing information to residents in a more timely manner. Publishing the meeting agenda on the

GLEN ECHO ONE OF LAST TOWNS JOINING NAT'L FLOOD PROGRAM

If Glen Echo had not joined the National Flood Program it would have been practically a lone exception in Maryland.

A Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) listing of all the towns and counties in Maryland participating in the National Flood Program found 122 jurisdictions in the program (not including Glen Echo) and only two which were not at the time of the listing.

Maryland's Flood Hazard Mitigation Program makes flood insurance available to property owners in participating communities. In return, local governments must adopt ordinances to manage development within 100-year floodplains to prevent increased flooding and minimize future flood damage.

Floodway and Flood Insurance Rate Maps published by FEMA are used to delineate the 100-year floodplain and identify regulated land. Local watershed plans should address the location of 100-year floodplains or floodway zones, and the impacts of storm water management on 100-year floodplain elevation levels.

The National Flood Insurance Program administrator in Maryland, John Joyce, told Mayor Beers that among the Maryland jurisdictions that have joined the program there has been no discernable impact on property values that he was aware of, even though most people in jurisdictions that have joined the program do not buy flood insurance.

website on the Thursday before the Monday meeting, with "full acknowledgement that it's subject to change," would be appropriate, he said. Another suggestion -- publishing the meeting minutes shortly after each meeting -- was not feasible because the minutes are not official until approved at the next meeting, he said.

Ed. Note: Councilman Macy subsequently learned from Mr. Joyce that the town needs to participate in the NFIP to make flood insurance available to anyone who wants it in the town. In the past, people have been able to get flood insurance in towns through Montgomery County's participation, but FEMA is now requiring that each town join individually.

AROUND TOWN

Matt Polak and Erin Fox were married on Sept. 23 at the Little Sanctuary of St. Alban's School. Matt's parents, Cathie and Willem, Princeton Ave. residents, also were married at the Little Sanctuary and all their children were baptized there. Harvard Ave. residents Neil Shaut served as best man, and his brother Robert, was a groomsman.

Matt and Erin have known each other since high school. They will make their residence in Arlington, Va.

Town Councilwoman Nancy Long was pictured in the September issue of Next Door News at last month's Glen Echo Park art show, where she arranged all the art work for display. It mentioned that she has volunteered at the park since its inception.

The wedding of Rachel Brintnall and Seth Harrington will take place at the Woodend Audubon Sanctuary on Saturday, Oct. 28. Both bride and groom recently graduated from Georgetown University with law degrees, and will begin working for law firms in Boston after their marriage. Rachel is the daughter of Mike and Isabel Brintnall of Wellesley Circle.

PRINCETON RESIDENTS DON'T WANT SIDEWALKS RAISED

By Rex Rhein

Residents of upper Princeton Ave. objected to the council's suggestion that sidewalks could be raised to channel storm water runoff from MacArthur Blvd. at a Sept. 11 meeting.

Resident Phyllis Fordham said it had been agreed at previous meetings that an engineer should first look at the situation. "If we start doing patchwork, and all of us as neophytes sitting around deciding what the design should be, we are just asking for trouble," she said. Councilmember Nancy Long said three County employees --including an engineer, a storm-water management expert, and the deputy director of their division-- would meet informally with the Council at 4:00 pm on Sept. 27 to walk around town and "discuss with them what the problems are." There will then be a "full meeting" with the county team, she said.

At Ms. Fordham's suggestion, Mayor Beers said the town would try to hire its own expert to look at Princeton Ave. and perhaps join the walkthrough. "I think we need to get the county involved because a lot of the water that came in from Princeton was running down from MacArthur, down the top of Princeton, into the right-of-way and other areas," Mayor Beers said. "The County should take some steps to redirect that part."

Joining Ms. Fordham in her objection to raising the sidewalks were Maryse and Rex Rhein and Betsy Carpenter.

HISTORY BOOKS SELLING WELL; SECOND PRINTING UNDERWAY

There are only about 20 copies remaining of "Glen Echo: The Remarkable Saga of a Very Small Town," which was published by the town in June in a run of 200 copies. The book is selling well at the town hall, Glen Echo Park, the Montgomery County Historical Society, and other locations at the price of $15.

Because of the brisk sales, the town is ordering another 200 copies to be printed.

Glen Echo residents are entitled to one copy free per household. Yet residents at more than half the town addresses have not yet picked up a copy. It is available at the town hall during regular office hours (see p.2) or at town events. Town residents may buy extra copies for $10 each, a reduction from the regular sales price.

In addition there are still a number of residents who have not yet picked up their free copy of "A Walking Tour of Glen Echo." There are now fewer than 20 copies of this booklet remaining, and the town is considering a second printing of this publication as well. It sells for $10 to the general public.

TOWN COUNCIL NOTES

September 11

At the request of Councilmember Nancy Long, Town Resident (and artist) Raya Bodnarchuk described her latest commission from the Montgomery County Arts & Humanities Council. She showed photographs of styrofoam models of 11 animal sculptures, ranging from snakes to rabbits, which will be cast in bronze and placed on masonry pilasters on the Forest Glen pedestrian bridge on Georgia Avenue at the Beltway. They are to be installed by the end of November...

Kym Elder, the site manager for Glen Echo Park introduced the new Superintendent of the George Washington Memorial Parkway, David Vela. While he values the decisions his predecessors have made, Mr Vela said he was "not necessarily bound by them." Councilmember Nancy Long asked whether there was any way to amend the current 15-year agreement between the National Park Service, Montgomery County and the Partnership. Mr Vela said if the current agreement does not meet the needs of the partners, "when it comes time for renewal we're going to take a look at it." Mayor Beers noted that there were 10 years remaining on the original agreement...

RESIDENTS SEE CAROUSEL FILM AT TOWN HALL

"Carousel of Memories," a documentary about Glen Echo Park's historic Dentzel carousel, was screened at the town hall on Sunday, Sept. 17. Filmmaker Cintia Cabib was present to discuss the film and answer questions about the carousel.

The film features Glen Echo Town Councilwoman Nancy Long, who led the efforts to keep the carousel at Glen Echo Park after the amusement park closed; restoration artist Rosa Ragan, who restored and re-painted all the carousel animals to their original colors, and Julia, Allegra, and Bram Wilson of University Ave., who recalled their enjoyment of the carousel. It also had in-depth interviews with the mother-and-son team of Irene and Max Hurley, who have been running the carousel for many years, and Maryland State Senator Gwendolyn Britt, who was one of the protesters of the park's segregation policy in 1960.

Some of those present recalled that the carousel used to boast a gold (brass) ring, which would entitle its holder to a free ride. However, most of the rings were steel, which were then thrown into a container by the unlucky riders.

The film also showed Max Hurley making one of the rolls of music for the carousel's antique Wurlitzer organ by punching out the holes individually. CDs are never used for the Glen Echo carousel, he said.

A question as to who carved the carousel's animals was answered by visitor Richard Cook, who said the artists were Italian and German woodcarvers in the United States.

Those who were unable to attend the town hall showing may see the film every Saturday and Sunday from noon-6:00 p.m. in the park's Arcade building.
